An Italian was once visiting in New York city. He wished to take a walk so that he could see the city, but he was afraid that he would get lost because he didn't know a word of English. Therefore, after leaving the hotel, he stopped at the first corner and carefully copied in his notebook the name of the street on which his hotel was. Then he walked on. Finally, however, he got lost. Some hours later he arrived in a police-station. After a lot of conversation, a translator was called. The Italian explained to the translator that he didn't even know the name of his hotel or the name of the street on which the hotel was. He then showed the translator what he had copied in his notebook. The words which he had so carefully copied were "One Way Street."

True or False

41. The Italian could speak English.
42. The man could copy the name of the street where his hotel was.
43. What did the man wish to do?
44. What made him afraid?
45. Did he get lost?
