Helen Keller (1880- 1968) was born in Alabama, and was a normal, healthy baby. She had a serious illness before she was two years old. When she became better, she could no longer see nor hear, and she had forgotten how to talk.

Her parents asked a teacher to help them. In 1887 Anne Sullivan came to educate Helen. Anne used a doll for the first lessons. This was a new game for Helen, and she learned words quickly. Within a short time, Helen understood that everything had a name, and after three years she could read and write in Braille.

In 1890, Helen went to a school in Boston to learn to talk. Miss Sullivan was her companion there. When she finished the school, she began to study the problems of blind people. A book about her early years, The Story of My Life, was published in 1902. It explained many of the problems she had in learning to read, write, and speak. Later books included The World I live In, Out of the Dark and Let Us Have Faith.

In 1913, Helen Keller made her first speaking tour. She was willing to give speech for groups that helped the blind. Her trips took her around the world.
